Whatsapp. Mailme. Savings rates may have been dropping recently, but Islamic-compliant challenger bank Al Rayan Bank has bucked the trend by launching a new sharia account paying an 'expected profit' of 1.6% variable. As MoneySavingExpert.com founder Martin Lewis wrote in this week's email, we've seen a series of rate drops among the top easy-access and fixed-rate savings accounts, with top easy-access payers Marcus and Cynergy both cutting the interest they pay to 1.45% AER last week.

Sharia-compliant accounts provide the same day-to-day banking services as mainstream current accounts. However, they don't give you a return on your money or offer overdraft facilities as the principle of paying or charging interest is against Islamic law. Any money invested will be kept separate from other bank accounts – it won't be used to generate interest or be invested in prohibited businesses.

Sharia-compliant savings - Money Advice Service

Islamic banking is not restricted to Muslims only – it is perfectly permissible for non-Muslims to take out sharia-compliant products. In fact, these halal (or 'permitted') products can be desirable to anyone to whom ethical banking is an important consideration.
